CEO'S MESSAGE

A Year of Restoring Freedom and Dignity

This year, we have approached our work with a renewed commitment to storytelling, not as a mere recounting of events, but as a testament to the lives transformed. We are reminded that an annual report is not an autopsy of the past, but an instrument of credibility and trust. It is a document meant to touch both hearts and minds.

"Our work begins with protection, but its true purpose is restoring dignity, rights, and hope."

In 2025, Mary Ward Loreto (MWL) navigated a complex strategic environment. From the exploitation of migrant workers to the persistent vulnerabilities of women and youth, the challenges have been significant. Yet, our mission remains clear: to restore freedom and dignity.

Our work this year has spanned protection, empowerment, and prevention. We have seen 573 beneficiaries receive direct support, launched critical research on migrant exploitation, and expanded our reach through strategic partnerships. But numbers alone cannot capture the resilience of a survivor reclaiming their life or a community standing against trafficking.

As we close this year, we carry forward the lessons, the stories, and the hope that guide our work. We invite you to read these pages not simply as data, but as an invitation to continue this journey of change together.

THE YEAR IN ONE STORY

Ravi's Journey: A Window into Modern Exploitation

Ravi was 29 years old and lived in a small town in India. After several years working in hospitality, he began looking for opportunities abroad to earn more money and support his family. A recruitment agency offered him a job in Europe, telling him that Albania was part of the European Union and that working there could help him later transfer to another EU country. He was promised a good salary, accommodation, and a regular employment contract.

However, the recruitment process lacked transparency. Ravi did not receive full information about the working conditions, and two different contracts were presented to him: one for the visa application and another to sign after arriving in Albania. The agency urged him to sign quickly, without giving him time to read or fully understand the documents. Ravi also paid a significant recruitment fee and borrowed money from family members to cover travel and administrative costs. As a result, he arrived in Albania already in debt.

His journey involved several transit countries before reaching Tirana, and he had little information about residence or work permit procedures. This made him increasingly dependent on the intermediaries who organized the trip. When he arrived in Albania, reality differed from the promises. The contract he was asked to sign listed a different employer, a lower salary, and longer working hours. Ravi worked up to 14–16 hours a day in a tourism business and often remained on call during the night. Part of his salary was transferred to a bank account, while another part was paid informally in cash. Payments were sometimes delayed for weeks. He had no paid leave and could not risk-taking sick leave without losing his job. Shortly after starting work, the employer took Ravi's passport, claiming it was needed for residence permit procedures. The document was never returned. Without his passport, Ravi could not complete administrative procedures or send money home through official channels, as transfers required identification documents. Instead, he relied on a friend to send money on his behalf.

At times, the employer transferred Ravi to other businesses connected to him without consent or contract changes. Fear was constant. The employer repeatedly reminded Ravi that his residence permit depended on the job and could be cancelled at any time. On several occasions, he threatened to send him back to his country if he complained about the working conditions

Key Indicators of Exploitation:

- Passport withheld by employer
- Excessive working hours (14–16 hours per day)
- Debt from recruitment fees
- Deceptive recruitment practices
- Contract substitution after arrival
- Informal or delayed wage payments
- Dependence on employer for residence status
- Transfer between workplaces without consent
- Threats of deportation or job loss
- Limited knowledge of rights and access to help

Breaking the Cycle

Over time, Ravi realized that he was not the only one facing these problems. Other seasonal workers from different countries experienced similar situations, including withheld passports, reduced wages after the end of the season, and pressure not to report abuses. Although Ravi thought several times about seeking help, he was afraid. He was unsure about his rights and did not know where to turn. He also feared that reporting the situation could lead to the loss of his residence permit and deportation. The employer had repeatedly told workers that he had strong connections with the police. In addition, some workers believed that workplace inspections were rare and focused mainly on technical safety rather than workers' rights.

After several months, a colleague suggested that Ravi contact Mary Ward Loreto. During his consultation, Ravi learned for the first time that the employer's retention of his passport was illegal and that many of the practices he had experienced were indicators of labor exploitation and possible elements of modern slavery. With legal support, Ravi filed a complaint with the relevant institutions and requested the return of his documents. He resigned from his job and eventually found another employer. The process was not easy. His former employer verbally threatened him and demanded monetary compensation for the "damage" caused to his business. With legal intervention and institutional support, Ravi was able to recover his passport and begin the procedures to regularize his employment status.

What This Story Reveals

Ravi's case illustrates how lack of transparency, illegal fees, document retention, and economic coercion create a trap of modern slavery. It highlights the urgent need for systemic oversight in labor migration.

STRATEGIC ENVIRONMENT

The Year in Context

In 2025, Albania's social landscape continued to evolve in ways that shaped the work of Mary Ward Loreto Foundation. Changing migration patterns, economic pressures, and persistent social inequalities have created new risks while deepening existing vulnerabilities for many communities. Behind each case encountered by our teams lies a broader system of factors that influence people's safety, rights, and opportunities. Across the country, several interconnected challenges continue to affect individuals and families who find themselves at risk of exploitation, violence, and social exclusion.

1. Domestic & Gender-Based Violence

Women and girls remain disproportionately affected by domestic and gender-based violence. Many survivors live in environments where economic dependency, limited access to housing, and strong social pressures make it difficult to leave abusive relationships. Family breakdown, unemployment, and lack of long-term support services often deepen these vulnerabilities, leaving women and children exposed to repeated cycles of violence and insecurity.

3. Refugees & Unaccompanied Minors

Albania has also seen a growing number of people arriving from conflict-affected regions seeking safety or transit toward other destinations in Europe. Refugees and unaccompanied minors often face procedural delays, uncertain legal status, and limited access to essential services such as housing, healthcare, and education. These gaps increase the likelihood of marginalization and can expose vulnerable individuals to exploitation or abuse.

2. Labor Exploitation of Migrants

Albania is increasingly becoming a destination for migrant workers from non-EU countries, particularly from Asia and Africa. Many arrive through recruitment channels that lack transparency and are often unfamiliar with local laws, language, and administrative procedures. When combined with recruitment debts, dependency on employers for residence permits, and limited access to information about their rights, these conditions can create a high risk of labor exploitation and trafficking.

4. Roma Community Vulnerability

Roma communities continue to face structural inequalities rooted in persistent poverty, limited access to education, and unstable employment opportunities. Many families rely on informal sources of income, which restricts access to social services and increases economic vulnerability. These conditions can heighten the risk of exploitation and trafficking, including harmful practices such as child begging.

Country Context Note

Systemic gaps in protection and limited institutional capacity compound these risks, necessitating a coordinated response from civil society.

The Context

In Albania, vulnerable individuals, including women, children, migrants, refugees, and young people from disadvantaged backgrounds, face interconnected risks such as domestic violence, human trafficking, labor exploitation, and social exclusion. These challenges often overlap, creating complex situations that require coordinated protection and support. Women and girls are particularly affected by domestic and gender-based violence. Those from unstable family environments often struggle to secure safety, independence, and protection for their children. Divorce or family breakdown often leads to economic insecurity, housing instability, and increased exposure to harm. Albania has increasingly become a destination for foreign workers, particularly from Asian and African countries. Many migrant workers are vulnerable to exploitation due to language barriers, dependence on employers for residence permits, and limited knowledge of their legal rights. These risks increase when personal documents are withheld, and institutional responses are delayed or insufficient. Refugees and unaccompanied minors arriving from conflict-affected regions face additional barriers. Delays in asylum procedures, limited guidance on their rights, precarious living conditions, and restricted access to healthcare, education, and social services increase their exposure to exploitation, abuse, and marginalization. Roma communities continue to experience structural exclusion rooted in persistent poverty, limited access to education, and unstable livelihoods. Many families rely on informal sources of income, restricting access to social protection and increasing vulnerability to exploitation, including child begging. In response to these vulnerabilities and gaps in protection systems, Mary Ward Loreto has developed a holistic approach combining early identification of victims, direct support services, legal assistance, psychosocial counselling, and long-term reintegration.

Through its Advice and Service Centres and targeted projects, MWL provides coordinated support to those most at risk, promoting safety, dignity, and opportunities to rebuild their lives and participate fully in society.

KEY PROJECTS

1. “SAFE – Supporting and Acting For Empowerment” followed by SAFE (R) – Supporting and Acting For Empowerment - Revised as an enhanced initiative aimed at strengthening MWL’s strategic interventions in protection, empowerment, and prevention to effectively combat human trafficking in Albania.

2. “Addressing human trafficking and exploitation of the Asian community in Albania”

3. “Support for survivors of gender-based violence through the Mary Ward Loreto Foundation”

4. “Online psychological counselling for Albanian survivors in the UK”

A key highlight for this year has been a new partnership with Region of Puglia through a project addressing gender violence resulting in:

- 1) The launching of a new reporting mechanism for violence against women through the installation of “Cassetta Help” boxes with QR Codes in sensitive community locations, including various public places and schools. Safe, fast, and confidential reporting of violence cases through an online form directly connected to the 24/7 Operational Center.
- 2) Provision of continuous psychological support through the “Telesupporto Psicologico” service and a dedicated contact number available 24/7.

These projects have been carried out at Advice and Service Centers (ASCs) currently in Tirana, Lezha, Rrëshen, and Saranda, addressing the needs of victims of trafficking, gender-based violence, and vulnerable migrants.

The Change We Brought

- ✓ Improved identification and long-term support for victims.
- ✓ Strengthened referral mechanisms with law enforcement.
- ✓ Economic empowerment reducing re-victimization risks.

Edlira's Story

Edlira lived for nine years in an abusive marriage. Although she obtained a protection order, the lack of alternative housing forced her to remain in the same household as the abuser. Hoping for a fresh start, she moved abroad, but the violence continued. After returning to Albania, Edlira sought help from the Mary Ward Loreto Advice and Service Centre, where she received emergency assistance, psychological counselling, and legal support to start divorce proceedings. Today, she has secured employment and is rebuilding her life with greater independence and safety.

The voice of Edlira:

For the first time in many years, my heart told me: 'This is not my fault.' I started to view myself not merely as a victim, but as a person experiencing a new beginning."

Miranda's Story

Miranda was 18 when she married a man living abroad who had been presented as stable and respectful. Instead, she faced control and abuse. Her husband took her passport and forced her to work up to 14 hours a day without pay to repay a debt he owed. Her situation changed when a customer noticed her distress and helped her escape. After returning to Albania, Miranda received legal guidance, psychological support, and employment assistance through MWL. Today, she is rebuilding her life with greater independence and safety.

The voice of Miranda:

"I no longer feel shame in speaking about my experiences; they were part of my life, but they no longer define who I am."

EMPOWER

Empowering Survivors & Communities

EMPOWER

Empowering Survivors & Communities

Survivors need more than immediate safety; they need tools to rebuild. Empowerment involves economic stability, social integration, and youth engagement. After immediate protection, emergency assistance, and short-term support are provided, survivors often face significant challenges in returning to a normal life, as they must essentially start over. They need to rebuild stability for themselves and their children, yet the absence of long-term and sustainable services can contribute to recidivism. Survivors also require personal recovery and human empowerment, including trauma healing, restoration of self-esteem, and the development of healthy relationships. Economic vulnerability continues to be a key risk factor, increasing the likelihood of abuse, exploitation, social exclusion, and the intergenerational transmission of vulnerability. Migrant workers in Albania remain a community facing challenges due to language barriers and limited knowledge of the local culture. They require support to facilitate their integration as part of empowerment efforts and to prevent potential risks. Access to reliable information on issues affecting their daily lives is essential to improve their quality of life, while strengthening their ability to navigate and access relevant services. There are limited opportunities for young people and children to actively engage in their communities and participate in initiatives that benefit society. Providing such opportunities is essential not only to empower them but also to support their development into resilient, non-vulnerable adults.

Integration of Migrant Communities

Trainings on legal rights, labor regulations, and healthcare access were delivered for Asian and African communities. Three sessions led by a lawyer covered migrant worker regulations in Albania, the Albanian Labor Code, and residence permit procedures. The trainings also addressed cultural differences that may create misunderstandings between employers and employees and included guidance on accessing healthcare services and registering in the Albanian health system. Participants also initiated Albanian language courses to improve integration and workplace communication, supported by MWL. The lessons include elements of Albanian culture and history to help participants better understand the social and institutional environment. Social gatherings were organized to strengthen community cohesion, trust, and mutual support.

Rise Up - Empower-Full

38 participants in Lezha, Rrëshen, and Tirana. 20 women enrolled in vocational hairdressing courses.

Service Learning & Youth

MWL implemented five Service-Learning initiatives with youth groups and one school, in partnership with local education authorities and community organizations. The activities addressed community issues such as tourism, elderly care, environmental awareness, and social inclusion. Over 550 children and youth (ages 10–18) participated, developing civic engagement, teamwork, and critical thinking. MWL also supported its fifth annual Summer Camp in Tropoja, providing a safe learning space for 150 children focused on online safety and trafficking prevention. The initiatives engaged 35 teachers and youth workers, promoting intergenerational dialogue and active citizenship. In Rrëshen, students from the “Nënë Tereza” school completed the “Eja n’Mirditë” project, becoming ambassadors for their community

AWARD HIGHLIGHT

"Come to Mirdita" project won the Honorary Award at Regional Service-Learning Awards, Sarajevo.

Voices of Empowerment

"I am no longer alone in this battle – now I know I have someone who listens to me without judging."

"I felt as if I was allowed to be myself, without fear."

"I never imagined I would truly laugh from the heart again – but it happened."

Systemic Change

- Youth developed civic agency and local capacity.
- Migrants gained access to healthcare and legal knowledge.
- Women gained economic independence through vocational skills.

SAFE Project Impact

- 35 young people supported in Puka & Fushë-Arrëz.
- 3 secured employments,
- 15 received startup grants.

PREVENT

Prevention & Risk Reduction

PREVENT

Prevention & Risk Reduction

Prevention tackles root causes: poverty, lack of information, and social exclusion. Various social and economic factors in Albania increase people's vulnerability to exploitation, human trafficking, and social marginalization. Key challenges include domestic and gender-based violence, exploitation of foreign workers, returning migrants, and limited knowledge among youth and communities about risks and rights. Women and girls often experience abuse within their families while lacking access to support services or economic independence, and cultural norms may discourage them from seeking help. Migrant workers, particularly from Asian countries, face poor working conditions, limited awareness of their rights, and dependence on employers for residence and employment, increasing their risk of exploitation. Returning migrants frequently come back without stable jobs, social support, or access to reintegration programs, leaving them at risk of poverty or further exploitation. Youth and communities in rural and marginalized areas often lack reliable information about migration, labor rights, and trafficking, which makes them especially vulnerable to deceptive recruitment, irregular migration, or online exploitation. Addressing these challenges requires preventive approaches that tackle both immediate risks and the root causes, including poverty, lack of opportunities, limited access to services, and low levels of awareness.

Direct Support

Early identification via ASC model.
Coordinated response with local authorities.

Strategic Advocacy

18 campaigns reaching 900 people. Focus on internet safety and trafficking risks.

Capacity Building

13 trainings for 245 professionals (police, health, social services).

Our work and Impact:

Through the services provided by the Advice and Service Centres (ASCs), vulnerable individuals were able to access timely legal, psychosocial, and livelihood support, helping to stabilize their situations and reduce the risk of exploitation. Prevention and awareness activities increased knowledge among children, youth, and communities about trafficking risks, rights, and protection measures, while encouraging active engagement in community initiatives. Collaboration with local institutions and service providers was also strengthened through joint discussions and awareness events, improving coordination in addressing vulnerabilities. In addition, the mapping research on the Asian migrant community generated important evidence on patterns of exploitation, supporting better-informed responses and future interventions.

Key Events

- Children's Day & July 30 Events – Lezhë: Activities with vulnerable children and community members highlighting education as a tool against exploitation.
- Anti-Human Trafficking Month – Saranda: School sessions and a film screening on traffickers' methods reached around 120 students, alongside a roundtable with service providers on case identification.
- World Day Against Trafficking (July 30): Campaigns in Rrëshen, Rubik, and Lezhë reached 230 children through marches, art exhibitions, and community discussions with MWL volunteers and the Red Cross.
- St. Bakhita Day – Blinisht: The 10th anniversary event with the URAT Network brought together survivors, advocates, and community members to promote resilience and collective action against modern slavery.

Ela's Story: Prevention in Action

Ela, a mother of three children, first came into contact with the services of the Advice and Service Centre in Saranda during an outreach activity organized by MWL. At that time, she was working temporarily as a substitute cleaner in a public institution and was worried about her future, as her contract was about to end. The uncertainty about providing for her children placed her in a situation of increasing vulnerability. After approaching ASC Saranda, Ela received assessment and counselling sessions, which helped identify her immediate needs and develop a personalized support plan. MWL supported her with referrals and accompaniment to social services, assistance in preparing documentation to access economic aid, and guidance in enforcing a court decision regarding unpaid child support that her children had not received for several years. Encouraged by the counselling process and her personal interests, Ela decided to attend a professional training course in aesthetics. With the support of MWL programs, she successfully completed the six-month course and was later employed in an aesthetics center, where she continues to work today.

Ela's case highlights how early intervention and coordinated support can help prevent the deepening of vulnerability, enabling individuals to strengthen their economic stability and build

Behavioral Change

The Mary Ward Loreto staff are very encouraged to see the progress of the beneficiaries over the time. Many of them started with little knowledge about where to seek help or what services were available. Over time, they have become much more informed about social services, employment opportunities, and community support systems. These changes help create communities that are more resilient to exploitation and better equipped to prevent trafficking and abuse. Also, lead to Improved collaboration between civil society and public institutions, and stronger local protection mechanisms and referral systems

Breast Cancer Awareness

As we observe Breast Cancer Awareness Month, let us come together to honor the courage of those who have battled this disease and support those currently fighting. Awareness is the first step in prevention, and early detection can save lives.

Research & Communications

Data Collected

Mapping research on Asian migrant community. Quantitative & qualitative data from ASCs.

Trends Identified

1. GBV linked to economic dependence.
2. Information gaps for rural youth.
3. High exploitation risk for Asian workers.
4. Rising refugee arrivals.

Impact of Evidence

Data shaped new trainings for police and social workers. Informed awareness campaigns.

Our Research Study, Unveiling the Silence: Labor Exploitation of Foreign Migrants in Albania, helped us shed light onto the phenomenon of trafficking of foreigners in Albania. MWL collect significant quantitative and qualitative data through its Advice and Service Centers (ASCs), outreach activities, and direct work with beneficiaries, documenting cases of gender-based violence, trafficking risks, labour exploitation, and vulnerabilities affecting migrants, refugees, and returning migrants. The research helped identify patterns of exploitation and trafficking.

The analysis highlighted key trends, including persistent domestic violence, intitutional gaps in addressing these issues, limited awareness of migration risks and labour rights among youth and communities, and increasing vulnerabilities among migrant workers, particularly from Asian, African, and Latin American countries. An increase in refugees and asylum seekers from conflict-affected regions was also observed. These findings informed MWL’s programs, guiding awareness campaigns, targeted trainings, legal support, and prevention activities to emerging needs

Key Communications Actions

In 2025, the Foundation also launched a newly redesigned website as part of a broader organizational rebranding process. The new website strengthens the Foundation’s digital presence, making information about services, support mechanisms, and awareness resources more accessible to the public. Together with social media platforms, it serves as an important digital gateway through which individuals, partners, and communities can learn about the Foundation’s work, access support, and increasingly become a strategic channel for raising awareness, amplifying survivor voices, and connecting individuals at risk with essential support services

Our outreach in pictures

Financial Sustainability

Our organization operates with a diversified funding structure that strengthens financial sustainability and reduces reliance on a single donor. The majority of our funding comes from institutional partners and international organizations supporting program implementation and service delivery, complemented by contributions from philanthropic foundations, international NGO partners, and faith-based organizations. Over the past year, our overall budget increased by approximately 250%, reflecting the continued trust of our partners and the expansion of our project portfolio. This growth has enabled us to broaden our programs and reach more survivors of violence and vulnerable communities. Our financial approach prioritizes direct program implementation while maintaining the operational capacity required to deliver sustainable and high-quality services. The largest share of resources supports program activities and direct services for beneficiaries, including outreach, social work, and community initiatives. Additional investments strengthen long-term sustainability through infrastructure, staff development, and essential operational costs. Through transparent financial management, regular monitoring, and independent external audits, we ensure that all resources are used responsibly and contribute to meaningful and measurable impact for the communities we serve.

Strategic Outlook

Looking ahead, MWL will expand its support for migrant workers, responding to the growing risks of labor exploitation and vulnerability among foreign workers in Albania. At the same time, we will deepen prevention efforts with youth, strengthening awareness, resilience, and community engagement as key tools to prevent trafficking and exploitation.

We will also intensify collaboration with institutional partners, donors, and international networks to scale our impact and reach more vulnerable individuals and communities. By strengthening partnerships, expanding outreach, and building on evidence from our programs, MWL aims to broaden access to protection services, influence systemic responses, and ensure that more people can reclaim their rights, dignity, and opportunities for a safer future.
